

WRITER SHOT BY ANARCHIST

McGinnis-Iveagh in Critical Condition from Alexander Horr's Bullets.

LATTER HIS LANDLORD.

Shooting Followed a Quarrel Over an Alleged Insult Offered to Mrs. Horr.

Francis McGinnis-Iveagh, a newspaper writer of this city, a man of small stature, almost blind, and despite much encounter with misfortune, of a gentle, sunny temperament, is in a critical condition in the city hospital, from the effects of two bullets fired last night by Alexander Horr, a printer and circulator of anarchist literature.

In Yorkville Police Court this morning Horr set up a plea of self-defense, but was held to await the result of the inquest, he inflicted upon Mr. McGinnis-Iveagh.

Following is the story of the shooting as told today by Anna McGinnis-Iveagh, the wife of the injured man. It is corroborated by these witnesses: Leo Metzinger, Benjamin Herman and Mrs. Mary Rhoades, all of No. 30 Fourth avenue, where the shooting took place.

"Yesterday was pay-day on the Daily News. My husband came home in the evening with his money, and I went downstairs and paid Mrs. Horr $2.00, all we owed her.

"She was much put out when I told her we were going to move, and demanded that we pay for a small table burned in an oil-chest table cover in the room. I paid her 20 cents, enough to buy a new table cover of the kind, and she appeared to be satisfied.

"In the evening my husband and I left our four-year-old boy, Archie, with another roomer in the house, and went out to make some purchases.

"We were all packed up, and my husband was quite jubilant over his change of fortune. When we returned to the house some of the others came to the rooms, and we made out a little noise. Mrs. Horr came upstairs and complained.

"I'm so happy," my husband said to her, "that I can't keep still. I have a good job and I'm in love with all the world. I could even kiss you, Mrs. Horr."

"She laughed and went away. Soon after Horr came upstairs and standing on the steps, called my husband to the hall. They argued there, Horr insisting that my husband had insulted his wife. Mr. Herman, Mr. Metzinger and Mrs. Rhoades were in the hall.

"I started down the stairs toward Horr and as I did he fired at my husband, and as he fell over the banister, Horr came downstairs and I cradled with him but he fired twice more. One bullet struck my husband in the stomach. The other went wild.

"My husband left the house and I followed him. In Eleventh street he fell. As I was stooping over him a man came up and struck me in the face, knocking me down. I have since learned that this man thought my prostrate husband was drunk and that I was robbing him."

"The story told by Horr and his wife is different. According to them the underhand and unprovoked McGinnis-Iveagh was kicking the landlord, when the latter, in self-defense, shot.

SUBMARINE BOAT FULTON RAISED.

SANK IN SMOOTH SAND AND WASN'T EVEN SCRATCHED.

How the Wonderful Craft Took Her Sudden Trip to the Bottom of the Sound.

The submarine torpedo boat Fulton, which sank at New Suffolk, L. I., yesterday, was successfully raised to-day by divers.

The only damage done was by the water that poured into her through the open forward hatch. She sank in a bed of smooth white sand and wasn't even scratched. After her machinery has been overhauled and cleaned the vessel will be as good as ever.

The Fulton was to have started for Washington Friday, but her departure may be delayed a few days now.

The vessel was being prepared for a trip at the time she sank. Some minor repair was to be made to her exhaust pipe at the stern and under water. To do this a cable was passed under her stern and the Holland Company's big derrick took hold.

The stern was elevated in order to allow the workmen to get at the seaward end of the pipe. The raising of the stern brought the forward hatch, which had been left open, level with the water and the vessel began to fill.

The men at the derrick were at once directed to lower the stern and one of the engineers made an attempt to remedy the defect, but it was too late.

The engineer who had started to go down had a narrow escape from being carried down with the boat. Any damage that may have been caused to the machinery by the salt water is covered by insurance.

Edward Jones, No. 12 No. 11 street, Brooklyn, the driver, was arrested.
